BHUVISAMVAD

The Ministry of Mines has launched the mechanism “BHUVISAMVAD” as a platform to facilitate interaction among the GSI professionals, student/faculty of various universities/collages in the country.

Geological Survey of India (GSI), established in 4th March 1851, is a premiere geoscience organisation having glorious history and vivid future. Over the years, it has not only grown into a repository of profound geoscience information, but has also attained the status of a modern, geoscientific organisation of international repute. GSI boasts of a pool of around 3,000 qualified geoscientists with diverse experience and field based knowledge in various geoscience fields’ viz. ground surveys, air-borne and marine surveys, mineral prospecting and investigations, multidisciplinary geoscientific, geo-technical, geo-environmental and natural hazards studies, glaciology, seismotectonic study, and fundamental research.

In view of the vital significance of the mineral and mining sector and also environmental studies to the country’s economy, more and more professionals will be required in near future in this sector ready to take up the challenge. In this scenario there is vital requirement of interaction with professional geoscientists of GSI, students and researchers in the Universities.

The interaction among the GSI professionals, echelons of academia, industry and government organisations will be of immense use to disseminate the expertise of GSI. Following Regional Heads of GSI may be contacted for developing collaborations in this regard:
